Each of us has a unique way of getting things done. Some of us have a systematic approach that we learn over time. Others might be more impulsive. Still others might be a combination of the two. It's important to know your strengths and use them. The best executive coaches and life coaches understand this concept. They help their clients understand their natural approach. Once the coaching or mentoring process is underway, they support clients in aligning their ways of being with their values and goals. The use of information technology to provide convenient, reliable, and affordable health care has been a driver for the U.S. health care industry for many years. For example, in the 1950s, primary care physicians were on the verge of moving to a paper-based practice model where the patients received a paper-based summary of their medical history and physician notes after a clinic visit. In the 1970s, physicians began using personal computers in their practices to take patient medical histories, order, track and manage patient records, and create medical order sets to avoid double record keeping. Today, many physicians use electronic medical record (EMR) software as the cornerstone of their patient management system (PMS). Physicians use EMR software to store patient clinical information, provide a comprehensive patient summary, enable collaborative care, create well-organized patient notes, and provide an intuitive interface for referring physicians and other health care providers. In the past two decades, the industry has evolved to move from a paper-based model toward an entirely electronic medical record. New EMR applications have been developed that provide secure, web-based access to patient medical records. These
