A case of small-cell, neuroendocrine (oat cell) carcinoma of the lung is presented. Neoplastic cells of the oat cell type are characterized by abundant intracytoplasmic glycogen and the presence of numerous neurosecretory type granules of varying size. The light microscopic features of the tumor appear characteristic and are discussed in detail with references to the current literature. Immunoreactivity for carcinoembryonic antigen (CEA) is noted in this case with antigenic specificity of the neurosecretory granules, the distribution of which appear to indicate presynaptic association. Human blood lymphocyte growth in a plasma-lipid medium. Fresh lymphocytes grown in plasma-lipid medium (PLM) after positive selection by monoclonal antibodies did not have a
