The rate of amylase secretion in the rat submandibular gland is a direct function of the rate of cell proliferation, the rate of cell loss and whether the rate of cell loss exceeds the rate of cell growth. The rate of cell proliferation is a direct function of the rate of somatic cell production and, to a lesser extent, of the rate of cell death. The rate of cell proliferation and somatic cell production are under the control of pituitary adenylate cyclase polypeptide. The rate of cell death is a function of the rate of cell loss and the rate of apoptosis. The rate of cell loss is directly related to the rate of cell death. The rate of somatic cell production decreases with age but the rate of cell loss increases with age. The rate of cell proliferation decreases with age while the rate of cell loss increases. The rate of apoptosis in anagen cells increases with age, and may also be a function of age in telogen cells. There is no evidence to indicate that the submandibular gland has an increased rate of apoptosis in aged animals. The rate of apoptosis of young animals may be less than that of middle-aged animals, but this is not yet confirmed. The submandibular gland may, therefore, be at risk of developing a reduced rate of cell production which could produce alterations in amylase synthesis.ah, 'We're in India,' and I said, 'No. I'm in Meherigan.'"

Danielle's immediate neighbors, when they learn she is from the Air Force, offer their support and encouragement. "They wouldn't have cared if I was from Fiji. I would be on the list," says Danielle. "It's not the idea of speaking out, being outspoken. It's a matter of being proud of where you're from and loving where you're from. It's just part of who I am as a person." Danielle felt 3e33713323
