Q: What do I do if my lightsaber's socket doesn't fit the light saber? I've been having problems fitting my (rectangular) custom lightsaber with the spare hilt that came with it. Is there a way to "custom fit" the lightsaber in order to make it more comfortable to use, perhaps? A: From what I've read on various wikis, it seems that most people like to use the curved saber guard. However, even the lightsaber from the Prequel Trilogy has a slight curvature. From Wookieepedia: The sabers of the Prequel trilogy featured a slightly curved, rather than straight, saber guard. So since your saber came with a straight guard, you'll just have to live with it. A method for analysis of the atherogenicity of lipoproteins is proposed in which the initiation of the atherosclerotic lesion may be attributed to apolipoprotein B-containing lipoproteins. In this study, homogeneous aggregates of apolipoprotein B, as in lipoproteins secreted from malignantly transformed lymphoblasts will be isolated and characterized by hydrodynamic methods. The size of the aggregates will be altered by changes in ionic strength, pH, and protein composition. Their properties will be compared to those of lipoproteins in health and the extent of atherosclerosis will be determined by a method which compares the number of precipitates formed as a result of re-circulating the lipoproteins and the distribution of the precipitates in the arterial wall. The effect of these conditions on the physicochemical properties of the lipoprotein will be studied and monitored by the measurement of the surface charge, aggregation and flotation properties of the particles. The second portion of the proposed study involves the elucidation of the biochemical pathway through which apoprotein B exerts its toxic influence on cells. The intracellular response to apoprotein B will be monitored by biochemical and morphological methods. The effect of the lipoprotein on inositol phosphate production, with emphasis on the ability of the carrier protein to stimulate hydrolysis of this compound, will be determined by separation and characterization of inositol phosphates produced by incubation of apolipoprotein B with cell membrane preparations. The subcellular distribution of apoprotein B will be examined with the use of immunogold staining techniques. These techniques will reveal
