Q: How to detect Windows 8.1 boot in order to disable boot to desktop? I just got my new Windows 8.1 (pro) laptop and my VMWare VM won't boot in UEFI mode. The weird part is that I put Windows 8 Pro in UEFI mode in my VMWare and it boots, the problem is with my new machine. I am trying to do this on Windows 8.1 from a Windows 8 (downgraded from Windows 8 Pro) machine. For Windows 8 it went fine, the option was at UEFI option in the boot menu, but when I installed Windows 8.1 it somehow went to UEFI mode (the option is grayed out), and the whole UEFI was hidden. It's not displayed in the boot menu, and I don't have it at the option. I tried the UEFI hotkey combo as a workaround, but it doesn't work. How can I disable the boot to desktop option? A: You just need to press F8 during Windows startup. It has F8 in the title bar and it will take you to a menu that lets you install older versions of Windows. Reference Some versions of Windows are EFI-only and F8 is the only option, it's a pain as you still have to have an older version of Windows on a disk somewhere, and it's inconvenient when you boot to that disk too. So F8 is a great option for booting to an older version of Windows. Q: Remove leading and trailing whitespaces from string For example I have the following string $string=" " Now I want to remove leading and trailing whitespaces from the string, so I receive the following string $string=""; How can I do that? A: Note that the trim() function does not trim beginning or end of string. It only removes leading/trailing white spaces. If you need to remove both leading and trailing, then use the below code. $string = trim($string); A: trim($string) will remove spaces both on the beginning and the end, that's what you asked for. If you mean that you want to remove spaces only on the beginning and/or end, then add some extra conditions to the trim():

function remove_trailingspaces($input) {

The father of a little girl who was kicked to death in Mucajah, Pakistan, was interviewed recently by the BBC. Her name is Noor, or “light” in Urdu. She was two years old. Her father says that he was outraged when police refused to take any action against the people who beat his daughter and left her to die at the side of the road: “They killed my daughter and then walked away. People, women and children saw this and they were laughing at us. If we had a weapon, I would have killed everyone who did this to her,” he says. (In this video, Noor’s father pleads with the police for someone to help him — he only wants an investigation, not charges against the person who beat his little girl to death, and then left her there, naked and cold. She died the next day.) Noor was born in 2010, the daughter of a single mother of two girls. Her father says that the family “was not happy” that she was born, but she was a healthy baby. One day, Noor had gone for a walk with her mother and some other girls. They were throwing stones at a truck that was traveling slowly down the street, attempting to photograph the incident. From the BBC: The driver of the truck turned round and saw the young girls and started swearing at them. As he did this he slapped one of them. The owner of the truck did not confront the driver of the vehicle, and got back inside the truck. A short time later, Noor’s father arrived in the village. The father of the child was agitated, and went to the police station, where he was given “no information whatsoever,” he says. He has not been able to get the police to take action against the truck driver, even though he has repeatedly gone to the police station with video footage of the incident. When he returned home to find that Noor had died, he posted the incident to Facebook. He says that he has had to bury her children a total of eight times, as the village council refuses to allow her to bury Noor. “Her father is alone, without any help,” he said. “Nobody will help.” The father lost his younger sister, too, when she was
