Ephraim Nicholas Firehole (born December 20, 1844; died August 31, 1908) was a leader of American abolitionists and industrial workers in America, as well as an early advocate of "free love." He is best remembered as the editor of The Pioneer (1871-1876) and The Voice of the People (1876-1877) and as the father of two writers (Raymond and Verna Firehole). Firehole's involvement with women was controversial, and he was often accused of "free love" or even of polygamy. Firehole was born in Baraboo, Wisconsin, to a devoutly Christian Quaker mother and a German-immigrant father who was a contractor. A preacher's son, he was sent to a seminary at age nine and was ordained at 18. Influenced by his father, Firehole entered the business world as a self-employed contractor. He was also influenced by friends he made in the building trades, and the theories of Charles Fourier, August Comte, and Herbert Spencer, which led him to Socialism. After he organized the Western Federation of Miners in 1874, Firehole left his family for the East Coast, where he joined the Socialist Labor Party of America and became associated with Samuel Gompers, the group's leader. The first American woman to join a Socialist party, Jane Addams, worked for Firehole, who was also a supporter of women's rights. In 1877, he was
