“HyperMotion Technology includes more than 100 new animations,” said Adam Tickell, creative director of FIFA. “When players line up for a free kick, for example, the camera focuses on their faces to show where they want the ball to go, so we can make sure players are more naturally reacting to each other’s body language.” Team United Kingdom member Gareth Bale told EA Sports about his personal experience with the technology. “The way the ball controls when you dribble, the way the computer dodges you by doing certain actions and knowing the angles of attack when a defender is ready to tackle, I think the more it takes from real players and real life, the more realistic the game will be. That’s why I think we have so much more control. “Especially if you put myself on it,” he added. “There’s a lot of things, the way people would expect it to happen in real life that you don’t see when you play the game, so it’s more realistic.” Spartan team member Jadon Sancho scored a goal by “distracting” the goalkeeper when he darted past him after a run. “It shows what we’ve done with the movements we’ve created and the things that happen in real life,” Sancho said. “We want to show a bit of everything; it just shows that these things are possible in this game.” FIFA 18 introduced “FluidDynamics,” which used an interactive, physics-based ball to give players a feeling of “realism and weight.” “I think we all looked at it and thought, ‘This is getting crazy,’” Sancho said. “It’s something new and innovative that we’ve introduced.” The team also introduced “RefleXive,” a new ball intelligence system that allows players to hold the ball differently, and makes it so the ball reacts to the players. “All the skills – like moves and skills and decisions – the ball reacts to that,” Sancho said. “You can set some specific points or a specific area where it moves toward you and then specific patterns can

A population of neural progenitor cells is activated in the embryonic spinal cord of mutant mice lacking the LIM-only protein, Ctip2. The LIM-only protein, Ctip2, belongs to a subfamily of LIM proteins that act as cofactors for proteins with the HP1 domain. In the chick, Ctip2 acts as a cofactor for the bone morphogenetic protein receptor type II (Bmpr2), and Bmpr2-positive cells play a role in the mediation of the BMP signaling pathway. However, in mice, the expression of Bmpr2 is restricted to the Schwann cell lineage, and its significance in the nervous system has not been defined. A homolog of Ctip2 (Gli2) has been cloned and shown to be expressed in the nervous system, including the spinal cord. Therefore, we examined the expression of Ctip2 in mouse embryos and found that it is also expressed in the embryonic spinal cord during the first three postnatal weeks. Using transgenic mice that express the LacZ reporter gene under the control of the Ctip2 promoter, we found that it is strongly expressed in the E13.5 spinal cord. These results suggest that the Ctip2 gene is expressed in neural progenitor cells and plays some role in the spinal cord. Q: How to enable a button only when a checkbox is checked? I
