However, to truly master Photoshop, you need to practice with Photoshop's numerous additional tools, features, and techniques. These tutorials will teach you how to use the most common features to create compelling images. [pagebreak] Creating a Stylized Image Photoshop provides numerous tools for adding texture to an image. These tools are particularly useful for creating stylized elements. To make a stylized image, you need to add the stylized elements in a layer above any other layers. Select the Brush tool, and then go to Filter > Blur > Motion Blur. Click on Small Motion Blur, and use the slider to blur your stylized objects. Creating a Stylized Image This tutorial will explain how to create a beautiful image of a stylized wreath. Using the Drop Shadow tool, create a spot color 1px shadow and give it a softness of 20%. In the Invert check box, select the check box to have the black spot go to white instead of black. Click OK. Use the Gradient tool to create a wreath using a gradient of colors. Set the colors and pressure sensitivity. Select the 2nd gradient stop to make the gradient stop of the bottom color. With the 1st and 3rd stops selected, the wreath should be in a slightly darker green. Use the Sponge tool to create little bubbles. Use the same color as the wreath to create a spot color. Create two more wreaths on another layer. To add variation to the wreaths, add a marbled effect to one of the wreaths using the Colorize filter. Adding Backgrounds You can easily add backgrounds using Photoshop's various tools. This tutorial will give you a few ways to create your own backgrounds. Create a new document in Photoshop. Load a new photograph from your hard drive and paste it into the document. Create a new document in Photoshop. Load a new photograph from your hard drive and paste it into the document. Choice of homes, both old or new, around the world Living in Sweden When my wife and I decided to move to Sweden from New Zealand, one of the things we did think about was what it would be like to live in a cold climate. We knew it would be cold in the winter, but we weren't sure what it would be like for the rest of the year. What did we miss? We also wanted to know what we would miss about New Zealand. In the end, we decided to go for it and do our own research. Before we arrived, we read about homes in Sweden that we would like to have; both old and new, and places that we would like to avoid at all costs. This is what we found. Living in Sweden for some reason leads to many blog posts and articles about how to live in a small Swedish town. To be fair, many small Swedish towns are great places to live in. But what we want to show is that you don't have to live in a small town to live somewhere cold – which in fact, sometimes, is where you want to be. Some people might not want to live in a cold climate, and that is ok too. We are not telling people they have to live somewhere else, we are just showing that living in Sweden is not necessarily the end of the world and how you can still get a nice home, beautiful scenery and loads of culture. We have a good life here in Sweden. Sure, we miss many things about New Zealand, but we also see the value of the social services our government puts in place here. When we arrived, all the food in the shops was labelled in both Swedish and English. When we didn't know the names in Swedish, we just asked the shop assistants. We love the opportunities for learning languages that we have here. We love the country's community spirit – and the people are really nice. We also think it is important that Swedish has two official languages, Swedish and English, and that we have a large ethnic group from different countries – around 30% – who live here. It seems to us that the Swedish government is doing a good job when it comes to these issues. We do not want to see any move to bilingualism (Swedish and English), because that would lose one of the good things about Sweden. We do not think

The Interplay of the Electrostatics and Hydrophobic Forces in the Membrane Protein FABP4: Perspectives of Polyvalent Surfactants and Solvents. The hydrophobic forces in the functional dynamics of membrane protein FABP4 are known to be modulated by the electrostatic interaction with the polyvalent (cationic) surfactants. However, it remains unclear how this affects the intrinsic dynamics of the hydrophobic protein, the general character of the electrostatic interaction, and the magnitude of the critical micellar concentration for the solvated protein. In this work, we demonstrate that the single domain protein FABP4 experiences dynamic changes in its ensemble behavior in the presence of the new type of polyvalent ionic surfactants, i.e., PEI-coated silica nanoparticles with a wide range of surface charges. Our dynamic studies indicate that the electrostatic coupling between the protein and the surfactant is modulated by the charge of the PEI coating. With negatively charged PEI-coated silica nanoparticles, the hydrophobic protein loses its dynamism. If the PEI surface is neutralized, the protein experiences mild fluctuations between the different conformational states in order to ensure the optimal solvation with the attached ionic surfactant. The silica-PEI surface increases the number of accessible cavities in the protein structure, and thus promotes the protein solvation with the hydrophobic solvents. We also extend the study to assess the protein dynamics in the presence of mixed solvents containing both hydrophobic solvents and ionic surfactants. Our results reveal that the protein is slightly less dynamic in the presence of a mixture of hydrophobic alcohols and ionic surfactants than it is in the presence of pure hydrophobic solvents. The better solvation with the mixed solvents is due to the fact that the free ions in the alcohol/ionic surfactant mixture act as electrostatic stabilizers in the protein. Our results highlight the potential and the beneficial effects of the mixed solvents as a novel means to induce conformational fluctuations in the hydrophobic proteins.
