Q: Is it possible to deploy a single sbt app to a local maven repository? I'm writing some code which I'd like to make available as a library (Maven 2) which I can then include in other projects, so I just use the standard maven-install-plugin. However, due to issue 2370, there is a possibility of multiple versions of a plugin being picked up at runtime, so if I install the plugin, there is a possibility of version 1 being used, which has the incompatibility issue, and version 2 being used, which won't. What I'd like to do is make the plugin available within my project on the build server, but not within the central maven repo, so I can use the newly installed version. Is there a way to do this through sbt/ivy? Or do I need to make a pom file and change the version number? A: I think the maven-assembly-plugin is what you're after. As I understand it, you'll be able to tell it where to download the code, and it will make a single artifact which you then use in other projects as a dependency. . *
