N-Acetylcysteine modulates vasoactive compound release from cigarette smoke-induced human bronchial epithelial cells. Many respiratory diseases are associated with mucus hypersecretion; such hypersecretion may partly be due to increased production of vasoactive mediators, such as histamine, tryptase and leukotriene C(4). Further, cigarette smoke extract (CSE) has been shown to induce hypersecretion by increasing the release of these mediators from bronchial epithelium. We hypothesized that antioxidants such as N-acetylcysteine (NAC) may decrease the CSE-induced hypersecretion. To investigate whether NAC, via its well-known antioxidant properties, has modulatory effects on bronchial epithelial cell release of bronchoconstrictor and vasoactive compounds, CSE-induced human bronchial epithelial cells were co-cultured for 48 h with and without NAC. Tryptase and leukotriene C(4) were determined in the supernatant by use of enzyme-linked immunosorbent assay. NAC significantly reduced tryptase and leukotriene C(4) release by 85.8% +/- 5.0% and 78.0% +/- 4.8%, respectively. Thus, NAC may contribute to the treatment of respiratory diseases associated with mucus hypersecretion by reducing the release of tryptase and leukotriene C(4). Q: ASP.NET MVC 4 Ajax form helper, detecting changes without refresh I am creating a form in an MVC4 site. The form is filled with data from DB. After submitting the form I want to show in the same page the results, and the information from form must be updated in db. I am having problems in correctly detecting the changes
