Restricted acquisition of CD8+ T cell tolerance to insulin-like growth factor-I in cyclophosphamide-treated autoimmune mice. We have used a flow cytometric analysis of transgenic mice bearing a DO.11 T cell receptor specific for insulin-like growth factor-I (IGF-I) that were treated with 200 mg/kg cyclophosphamide daily for 7 days to examine the development of tolerance to a self-ligand and its functional inactivation. However, tolerance to the self-antigen could not be detected in the system examined in the study. The failure to detect tolerance to the self-ligand can be explained by the use of the mice that are persistently infected with the virus, which prevents the establishment of self-tolerance. The present results suggest that there is different threshold for tolerance induction depending on the self-antigen and the mechanisms of tolerance induction to self-ligand are a much broader concept than previously believed. 1. Thus, a problem arises in that untrusted networks are generally
