An exchange is a central marketplace with established rules and regulations where buyers and sellers meet to trade. Some exchanges, referred to as open outcry exchanges, operate using a trading floor where buyers and sellers physically meet on the floor to trade. Other exchanges, referred to as electronic exchanges, operate by an electronic or telecommunications network instead of a trading floor to facilitate trading in an efficient, versatile, and functional manner. Electronic exchanges have made it possible for an increasing number of people to actively participate in a market at any given time. The increase in the number of potential market participants has advantageously led to, among other things, a more competitive market and greater liquidity. With respect to electronic exchanges, buyers and sellers may log onto an electronic exchange trading platform by way of a communication link through their user terminals. Once connected, buyers and sellers may typically choose which tradeable objects they wish to trade. As used herein, the term “tradeable object” refers to anything that can be traded with a quantity and/or price. It includes, but is not limited to, all types of traded events, goods and/or financial products, which can include, for example, stocks, options, bonds, futures, currency, and warrants, as well as funds, derivatives and collections of the foregoing, and all types of commodities, such as grains, energy, and metals. The tradeable object may be “real,” such as products that are listed by an exchange for trading, or “synthetic,” such as a combination of real products that is created by the user. A tradeable object could actually be a combination of other tradeable objects, such as a class of tradeable objects. Every day, there are thousands of traders buying and selling for their own account. They rely on the exchange and its economy to keep prices close to the current market price. In other words, the trading activity depends on the market makers, not the traders. Traders tend to rely on market makers for the best prices because the traders cannot search for the best prices as easily as they can for the worse prices. Therefore, if the exchange cannot guarantee an adequate supply of orders to meet the demand from the traders, the traders will have to pay the bid-ask spread or be willing to wait for a better offer. Electronic exchanges typically use an open auction. An open auction is an auction where bids and offers are submitted and then the highest bidder and lowest offer selected. The classic auction is operated by a single seller who

The draw will take place at 11am AEST (New Zealand) time (8am NZ Time). We will provide details on how to watch the draw as soon as they are available. New Zealand will become the first host country to host a knockout stage match, with a quarter-final at Wellington's Westpac Stadium set to take place on 16 November, before the hosts face the winners of Group C (group matches 6-10) in another quarter-final on 24 November.1. Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a method of placing a substrate into a vacuum chamber, a substrate processing apparatus, and a heat treatment apparatus. 2. Description of the Related Art With the recent progress in the manufacture of highly functional semiconductor devices, techniques of forming thin films such as aluminum films and copper films are being applied to the manufacture of semiconductor devices. The film formation techniques are grouped into a sputtering method, a MOCVD (Metal Organic Chemical Vapor Deposition) method, and the like, depending on the film formation method. Among these film formation techniques, the sputtering method attracts attention because it offers the possibility of forming films of a large area and a high film quality. Among these film formation techniques, the sputtering method has an advantage of providing films at a low gas pressure. Among film formation methods, a sputtering method is, when used to form a copper film as an interconnection wiring pattern, suitable for a film formation on a substrate having a stepped portion, a fine structure, or the like, as well as a large-area film formation, because a film is formed with relatively uniform thickness. With the sputtering method, a high vacuum is required in the film formation chamber.

In general, the film formation chamber has a
