StarWind Virtual SAN for Hypr-V launch notes are usually accessible. his couch and he looks up and sees a shadow of a giant guy look down on him, and he goes, "Um, I guess I'll go get my poncho!" and he storms off and everybody is like, "Your poncho? He's kidding!" And it was a joke... Christopher Hayes: I don't know how that joke comes up. I don't think I've ever heard that before, that that's literally how that happens to somebody. Thinking Out Loud What are your favorite movies, and which filmmaker's sensibilities most inspires you? Christopher Hayes: I was gonna say sort of, my guilty pleasure, a movie where I really like the director is Let the Right One In. [SPOILER ALERT] It's a Swedish vampire film, and I really like that. It's a very unique film that's very Nordic, and I like it for all the reasons you just outlined. I appreciate that tonality of sadness. And when I watch it, it never makes me feel sad, so I like that too. But it's this very strange, very beautiful aesthetic. I mean, it's a film that has a child on a hill watching this vampire slayer, and it really evokes that sort of cold feeling of being a child in an industrial complex. When I watch it, I watch it all at once, because I can kind of see where it's coming from, and I can kind of see how the story moves, but I'm also able to step back and look at it aesthetically, which I don't often do. So I think that there's a combination of the two. What I like about Tarantino is he does it in a way where the aesthetics are very dark, and then the story is very down. What's your favorite thing about horror movies? Christopher Hayes: I mean, it's the perfect genre, right? When I was a kid, I had this friend, I was not much of a horror fan. Horror was sort of his other side, and he would like to have a sort of Saturday afternoon horror experience, so he would have a bunch of Chex Mix and omelets and we would watch horror movies and he'd pick it up and he'd be really sort of pleased that he could make this amazing breakfast out of this shit.
